COMMUNITY OUTREACH AND COLLABORATION

1. 2013 – present: Through the History of Indigenous Peoples (HIP) Network, I have been working with the Ojibwe Cultural Foundation (OCF) to explore methodologies of integrating Anishinaabe and university-based approaches to history to improve scholarship and teaching regarding Anishinaabe histories. The OCF, representing six First Nations on Manitoulin Island and surrounding areas, is dedicating to preserving and revitalizing Anishinaabe arts, culture, spirituality, and traditions. Through a project called “Aandse / Transformation: Anishinaabe Ways of Knowing and the Transformation of University-based Knowledge Creation and Transfer” we are creating spaces in which Anishinaabe intellectual leadership can reach Canadian citizens through education and knowledge transformation. York University is situated on Anishinaabe land, and so promoting Anishinaabe ways of knowing is a meaningful way of Indigenizing this particular institution. The focus on story-telling and learning by doing in Anishinaabe ways of knowing will make significant contributions to Indigenous methodologies and experiential education. The forms of knowledge mobilization resulting from this project are summer institutes, Anishinaabe students entering graduate programs at York, speakers’ series, conference presentations, blog posts, booklets for reserve schools, York classroom visits by OCF staff, and the development of an undergraduate field course centred at the OCF (underway).
2. 2015 – present: I have been interviewing French Canadian residents on L’Isle du Grand Calumet to discover both historical information and local memories of a story about the fur trader Jean Cadieux. In the process I have been sharing information with five residents of the island and I am supporting their efforts at rejuvenating commemorations of fur trade history on the island. The material I am gathering will be used in a book project.
3. 2012-present: Through the project “Tracing Metis History Through Archives, Artefacts, Oral Histories, and Landscapes: Bison Brigades, Farming Families, and Road Allowance People,” I interviewed Metis descendants of road allowances in Saskatchewan, and in the process helped a York University student reconnect with his family (the Morrissettes). The Morrissette family (Metis and Cree of the Mistawasis First Nation), especially Blanche Morrissette and Yvonne Richer-Morrissette, have helped me extensively to understand Metis oral histories and hand-made objects. I have presented and published some of this material, but it is an on-going project.

4. 2003-7: Through the “Belcourt Dictionary Project,” which examined a French-Saulteux (Anshinaabemowin) dictionary compiled in the 1840s by missionary Georges-Antoine Belcourt, I worked extensively with Anishinaabemowin-speaker Roger Roulette (Treaty One, currently of the Manitoba Indigenous Cultural Education Centre and University of Manitoba); Gilles Lesage, director of the Société historique de Saint-Boniface (SHSB); and linguist John Nichols of the University of Minnesota. We digitized and transcribed the dictionary, published it on the website SHSB, presented on the dictionary at conferences, public talks, and media appearances, and I am currently working on a biography of the dictionary.
5. 2000: While the interim director of the D’Arcy McNickle Centre for American Indian History at the Newberry Library, I worked closely with one of the Centre’s advisors, Susan Power, Sr. (Sioux Standing Rock and Chicago resident). I interviewed her about her life in Chicago and helped her compile a booklet on her life history through transcribing and editing her stories.
6. 1999-2003: I worked on the “Omushkegowak Oral History Project,” dedicated to preserving and sharing the oral stories collected by the Omushkego story-telling Louis Bird (Treaty Nine), from Peawanuck, ON. See <https://www.ourvoices.ca/index/about>. I interviewed and assisted Louis Bird, transcribed English stories, fund-raised for the project, and assisted in developing an index for his collection of stories.
7. 1997-2000: I have interviewed a descendant, Blanche Cowley-Head (Opaskwayak Cree Nation and founder of BCH Research Services) of a Metis freeman named Joseph Constant, which developed into an ongoing conversation and research sharing, which helped guide me in my understandings of Indigenous identities.
